1. Electroencephalography (EEG) is a primary method for non-invasively measuring neurophysiological signals in humans. Do you think it is possible to infer neural spiking activity and circuit interactions from an EEG signal?

2. Assuming you could infer neural spiking activity and circuit interactions from an EEG signal, what might be some ways that the data could be used to advance medicine or technology?